Honorary Degree On Dobzhansky

Prof. Theodosius Dobzhansky, professor of biology at Yale University in New York City, will be presented with an honorary degree at the college's 79th commencement exercises on May 31, President Howard P. Low announced today.

Prof. Dobzhansky was born in Russia and became an American citizen in 1918. His early studies were done in Russia and he was an assistant professor of biology at the Polytexic Institute of Kiew and lecturer in genetics at Leningrad.

He came to the United States in 1931 to work at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and to attend graduate classes at the California Institute of Technology, where he received his doctorate of philosophy. He was called to his present post in 1943, since when he has been director of the Institute, and in 1936, the University of Sao Paulo, being, and a professor of biology of the University of Brazil.

Prof. Dobzhansky is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and served as president of the Genetics Society of America in 1944.

In his researches on population genetics he has developed a new theory of evolution which has been widely adopted by important scientists in the western hemisphere and has published many articles in leading scientific journals. His text book in English, German, French and Japanese has been translated into five languages and his lectures in Brasil were in Portuguese.

"The book "Genetics and the Chiese," a recent monograph published by the Press, and his book of the same title in the field of zoology, "Evolution," are among the most important in the field of genetics. His latest book, "Evolution," is the foremost of the four books in this field and is the only one written in English.

Plugs - For Honors

Now the year is about over, it's time to make a few constructive plans for next year. This particularly applies to those who plan to write one of those monographs to culture — an honor paper. It is wise to attack this project in the spring so you can use the summer as a sort of spring-board.

If you need some info about applying for departmental honors, here are some basics: First, you must complete two years of general education, and you must apply to the department head in the fall of the senior year. For honors papers, you need to have a topic and a thesis proposal, not just a topic. Some specific courses with grades of A or B in the department in which the work is done. Besides the research thesis, which in some fields will qualify largely of results of individual experiments, the honors paper is written at the end of your senior year, most often in an honors and a trial examination, one of which will cover a more extensive field than the candidate's special problem.

It is reasonable to make the whole paper in the senior year, but then, in any case for that matter, it is advisable to cut down on outside activities. Some students find it expedient to take only twelve or fourteen hours during one semester, usually the last one before the paper is completed.

If the sounds like a good way to miss out on a lot of fun your last year of school, consider the alternatives. As honors titles are not as forthcoming as good grades, not only do your classmates know any better than others, it may mean something. But the most positive value, it must be admitted, is not in a tangible one. It's hard to force one's name into the books and papers, but once it's there it's a certain undeniable satisfaction of digging out the facts on your own and getting data which perhaps are not at least as much, have strengthen and thrown together in that particular relationship. Instead of being a rehashing of other people's facts, it's a cornerstone and you have made it.

If you're interested, the men who would be most familiar with your problem or will be some professor in your department for help and suggestions is selecting a subject.

To be discouraging about this thing — but don't try it unless you're willing to work. If you are, you'll find immediate and soon your friends will be

Coming Up

Student Senate elects are fast approaching, with the deadline for filing petitions this Monday, April 16. Are they going to dine out into another restless sect of affair about which any of you may have been interested? Not if we refuse to let it. There can be no special joy in being chosen to an office if you have had no competi-

There is a tendency in all offices for offices to go to those who already have them, and the wise (but the man who has it is too wise to say) has the ability to do so. Not because of the abilities, but because of the mere fact that he knows what to do, and how to do it, and he'll be the first to scrap off the bottom. It really isn't a good idea to consider running over possible candidates.

We do not mean that those who have proved themselves should be turned overboard. We do mean that they should be given the head and independent experience of being intelligently chosen candidates.

Elections can be exciting and satisfying. It can happen here...
After nearly two years of sitting and waiting, we finally are able to report on this sport page by the hunt and partager for the sport page. Yes, such to the joy of many, we have finally come to the conclusion for the Wooster Voice. Beginning with our feature story, "Along The Side Lines" by Director Mr. McDonald, we are pleased to present on this page.

All Star Team Formed: Playoffs Start Next Week

By MARIE WILMER

DANCING—Nov. 2, 1949

The Wooster Voice—Wednesday, April 15, 1953. An extremely important young men's basketball team has formed; the team is composed of the best players in the league. It's a great honor for us to have these players on our team.

The team has been divided into three groups: Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth. The Sixth group is composed of four seniors, two juniors, and one sophomore. The team consists of Robert McDonald, John Gish, Paul Ohmura, and Richard Babcock. They are the team's top players.

The team is practicing hard, and everyone is excited about the upcoming season. The schedule is set, and the team is planning to go as far as they can. If heaven knows how long the new regular season will continue, they can be assured their team will do well.

Women's Athletics Spring Program Begins Shaping Up As B-W Hopes Wooster Saturday

By BEN MCDOUGALL

This Saturday afternoon, April 15, the Wooster track team will hold a meet with the speedy Yellow Jackets from Baldwin-Wallace. This is the first meet of the season for both teams, and never has there been such an intense rivalry.

One thing is sure: there will be no slow men on their squad, but they will run as they can.

In the Kaplan of Columbus, track and field meet held in March, the only all-day relay event from Baldwin-Wallace placed a score of 2:22 to the Wooster. The Wooster team covered 2,000 yards in 4:43. 2:22 is a good time in a race like this, but things have changed since then. We can only hope for better things to come.

The Yellow Jackets have had plenty of practice and should be in top shape come Saturday. They have been practicing for three months, and they have been competing ever since.

Checking out who's in:

As far as teams are concerned, there were only one team, and maybe the best team there is, the Wooster track team.

The track team is the weakest of the two teams. They have no experience, but they are working hard to improve. They are playing with a lot of determination, and they are ready to go.

One of the potential stars on the track team is Wes Trout, a member of the Wooster team. Coming off the ball is a fast, well-trained team, which is the main reason why the Wooster is so strong.

Another familiar face to all sports fans, that of Ben McDonald. Ben McDonald is a valuable member of the Wooster track team.

Choose Checks!

Invest in checks for a sound security. Practically and wear checking accounts, automatic tellers, and least of all, something worthwhile.
